

Compassionate drug, alcohol, and mental health care for first responders.

First responders, such as firefighters, police officers, EMTs, and members of the military, experience high rates of substance abuse and mental health issues in comparison to the majority of the population. Increased levels of stress and trauma in the line of duty contribute to these struggles, along with the stigma that surrounds mental health and substance abuse. This can lead to hesitation among employees when seeking treatment.

Banyan Treatment Centers recognizes the unique needs of individuals in these lines of work, and provides individualized care in order to effectively treat this population.

Components of first responder treatment at Banyan:

- A dedicated phone line for first responders and referral sources: 877-957-6541. Trained admissions specialists are available 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. No call for help will ever go unanswered.
- A confidential assessment can be done over the phone to best determine the appropriate level of care for each employee.
- Certified Clinical Trauma Professionals are on staff to address issues that are faced specifically by first responders and their families.
- Our licensed therapists are trained specifically to meet the needs of first responders when it comes to trauma, PTSD, depression and other mental health disorders.
- The case management team at Banyan Treatment Centers assists with all necessary paperwork, including FMLA, short term disability, progress reporting, and after care planning.
- We maintain ongoing contact with referral sources to ensure a seamless transition from the job, into treatment, and back into the workforce.

First responders are more than twice as likely to struggle with substance abuse in comparison to the majority of the population.
